

Notes of a Nine Years Residence in Russia, from 1844 to 1853 With Notices of the Tzars Nicholas I and Alexander II (Classic Reprint)

The substance of the following Notes is taken from the Author's Journals. Assisted by a lively remembrance of the scenes he passed through, he has given these memoranda such form and coherence as they were capable of assuming. Many interesting facts and circumstances which he had noted down, are necessarily omitted in this little work, inasmuch as they have been already well told to the English public by other writers on Russia. But what had not already been seen in print, it seemed a kind of duty to publish, now that an acquaintance, more or less intimate, with the Russian Empire is sought by every Englishman. The humblest contribution to a knowledge of that remarkable country must acquire additional interest and value with every new event that marks the progress of the present war.
